1233 Hollins Street, located in the Union Square Historic District, is a rowhouse sharing the typical style proportions, scale, and materials of the district in general.

One of the most remarkable aspects of the Union Square neighborhood remains the lines of rowhouses still visible on every street. The east/west streets contain mostly Italianate rowhouses built by developers for middle class families just before and after the Civil War. A system of ground rents--where the developer made money by selling the house but leasing the land--brought lower selling prices and made single family homes affordable for much of Baltimore's population. The Baltimore adaptation of the Italianate style featured tall three-story houses each with a flat projecting cornice, elaborately framed doorway, tall narrow windows, and white marble steps. The development of the scroll saw meant that the brick houses could have front facades with decorated wooden doorways and cornices adorned with modillions, dentils, brackets, and other scroll work. Meta cornices followed the styles set by their wooden predecessors. Simple interiors, just one room wide, had front parlors, some followed by curving staircases to the upper floors, a dining room, and a kitchen. Wider houses included a first floor entrance hall along side the parlor. In this busy commercial neighborhood some of the houses were built, or modified, to accommodate first floor shops above the raised basements. Developed for their economy and practicality, these Italianate rowhouses have beauty, grace, and dynamism when seen in a group, lining both sides of the street.

1233 Hollins Street is a three story, two bay, Italianate rowhouse with a wooden cornice above the first floor forming a store front. The door is currently in the middle of the building. The facade is of running bond brick painted red. The six over one windows have inset wooden stencils above and relieving arches. The simple cornice is flat with end brackets topped by circles.

The front building has a shed roof which slopes away from the street. The roof of the two story back building slopes toward its alley. A chimney is located on the roof of the front building. The back building constructed of brick overlaid by stucco on the second floor. There are four windows in the side elevation.

1233 Hollins Street plays a significant architectural and historical role in the Union Square Historic District. The Union Square area is a remarkably intact nineteenth century residential and commercial district which could serve as an excellent example of what American cities looked and felt like during the last century.

The Union Square neighborhood was the early site of country houses for wealthy Baltimoreans. The area remained rural until the 1830's when the B & O Railroad established its shops at Poppleton and Pratt Streets and other related industries grew up nearby. Many of the immigrants who worked in the industrial shops lived close to their jobs. The Hollins Market, founded in 1838 with its present Italianate building completed in 1864, served as a commercial magnet, as a neighborhood convenience, as an architectural model, and as a community center. In 1847, the Donnell family donated a block of land to the city for use as a park, a block which became Union Square. The Donnells then developed the adjacent land as a real estate venture. Most of the building in the streets surrounding Union Square were constructed during city-wide, pre and post Civil War building booms. Development followed the grid system laid out by Thomas Poppleton in 1818; a system in which the east/west streets were most important, with lesser houses located in the north/south streets and the alleys. Given Union Square's early developers, and its magnificent rowhouses, the nineteenth century history of the Union Square neighborhood might well serve as a paradigm for the development of the city of Baltimore.

1233 Hollins Street is constructed on land which was originally part of "Bond's Pleasant Hills," owned by Philip Rogers, a successful businessman and public servant. In 1785, he leased part of his estate to merchant Thorowgood Smith who built Willowbrook, a Palladian style estate house, on the site of the present Steuart Hill Elementary School, just west of Union Square Park. One year later in 1799, Smith was forced to sell the house and the lease on the land to John Donnell, another merchant and the husband of Smith's niece. Donnell added more of Rogers' land to his holdings and purchased other nearby land. By 1819 he owned 53 acres. He died in 1827, leaving his estate to his wife, who conveyed it to her sons in 1847. That same year she donated 3 1/2 acres to the city for a park, now Union Square Park. In 1851 John S. Donnell bought all of the interest in the land from his two brothers, and in 1864 sold the house to the Catholic Church for the House of the Good Shepard. Donnell developed some of the land himself and some he sold to others for the construction of houses.

1233 Hollins Street was one of six adjoining lots developed by Joshua Carson, a builder. After purchasing the land in 1852, Carson leased the property and a house to John H. and George W. Thompson in 1857. The Thompsons, who owned the land until 1880, presumably rented the house to various tenants.
